Computer Science Education Week

Computer Science Education Week (12/7-12/13) is a global movement to celebrate the imagination & creativity at the heart of the practice of computer science. In celebration, the W.E. H.S. Computer Science Club has organized a few “Hour of Code” style virtual events that I believe you will find interesting & enriching!

Girls Who Code Club wants to inform you of a free virtual panel event hosted by “Girls Who Code” on Thursday, 12/17 at 3p.m. There is a gender disparity in technology, and more need to be encouraged to pursue careers in computer science & related fields. As young, aspiring female computer scientists, we hope to spread the message that it is essential that girls, who are exploring college majors and career paths while in high school, consider taking an interest in computer science to bridge the gender gap. Girls Who Code strives to eliminate this gender gap & make technology more diverse; the upcoming event is a great way for students, not only girls, to be inspired & interact with successful female techmakers.
